Freedom of Information Day

I recently noticed that March 16 is Freedom of Information Day, the birthday of James Madison, who is widely regarded as the Father of the Constitution and the foremost advocate for openness in government. It commemorates the signing of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) in 1966.

Anyone, even noncitizens, may request information from any agency. Requests for records on an ongoing criminal investigations that may interfere with that investigation, and classified data are exempt from the act.

In 1974 amendments to the FOIA gave citizens the right to see records about [one]self, subject to the Privacy Act's exemptions, the right to amend that record if it is inaccurate, irrelevant, untimely, or incomplete, and the right to sue the government for violations of the statute.

You can request records about yourself at <https://www.foia.gov/>.
