Labor Day

is a federal holiday to honor the American Labor Movement and the works and contributions of laborers to the development and achievements of the United States.

When working people are free to come together in greater numbers as a union, they have the power to negotiate for greater safety and a fair return for their work. They can raise wages, support students, and win the services communities need to be safe and to prosper.

Organized labor ended child labor, and gave us the 8-hour day, the 5-day week, paid overtime, benefits for injured workers, paid sick leave, vacations, and holidays for most workers.

These are the things to celebrate on Labor Day.

Is This Any Way to Elect a Governor?

This month voters in California will vote on a move to recall the present governor, Gavin Newsom, and if the recall passes, to elect his replacement. It's a two-part ballot:

- 1) Should the governor be recalled?
- 2) If so which candidate should replace him?

There are 46 candidates listed on the ballot. If more than 50% of the voters want the governor replaced, which ever candidate has the most votes will be governor.

This could be a small percentage of the votes cast. Probably smaller than what the writers of the recall provision in the constitution anticipated. I think a rewrite to insure some minimum support for the new governor should be made.
